
Elbert County Offices, Kiowa, Colorado

Land Design and Planning

Elbert County service offices were growing out their existing space and needed a fresh look at the potential of other property owned by the County. Our intern presented several concepts for how the 13 acre site could be developed, how it could incorporate county offices and how those offices could grow on the site as the need arose. Input from the staff helped finalize the desired configuration into a final development plan for a campus of county office buildings, a justice center and jail.

Additionally the plans identified key features of the site which would serve as landscaped park buffers between the new county offices and nearby residential neighborhoods.

The plans were well received and the County is now seeking architectural-engineering assistance to develop construction documents.

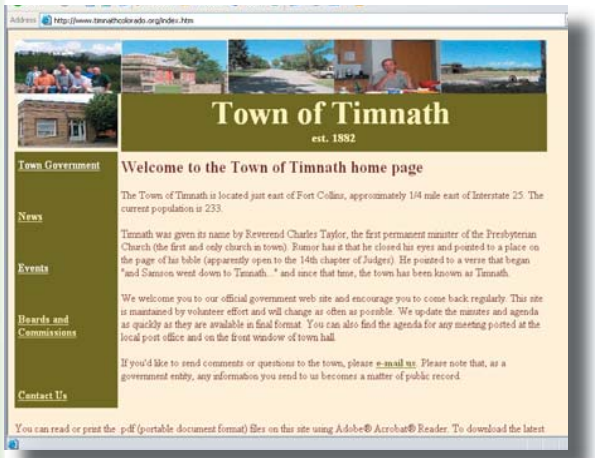
Web Page Design, Timnath, Colorado

Web Page-Internet Assistance



Timnath is a growing town which had an "in-house" web page that had become out dated and was difficult to use. They envisioned a web page that could provide basic information, inform about upcoming town council events, present minutes from past meetings, and generally be the information source for community government. Additionally they felt the web page should reflect the image of their small town and contain links to valuable infromation sources, local businesses and provide basic information about a range of local topics.

The TA Program provided the town with an intern who had experience in web page design and development. Part of the work was to educate the town staff in the upkeep of the web page information and to incorporate the wishes of the town council about the look, character and content of the page.
